JUROR FOR PRIZES : NORTH DAKOTA WOOLLY GIRLS

The North Dakota Woolly Girls, North Dakota's oldest operating wool mill, was established in 1995 by Janet Jacobson and Diane Schill. The company uses wool from their farms' sheep flock as the raw material to make their products and artwork. North Dakota Woolly Girls has participated in juried shows such as the Sioux Falls Sidewalk Art Festival, the Minnesota Craft Council Fall Show, the Park Point Art Fair in Duluth, Minnesota, the Red Wing Fall Art Fair, Powderhorn Art Fair, the Norsk Høstfest, as well as smaller venues in North and South Dakota. They regularly have participated in the Pride of Dakota Holiday Showcases and have sold their work in galleries in North Dakota and Minnesota as well as others across the country. In 2008 the North Dakota Woolly Girls were among 10 artists chosen to participate in the ArtUp initiative sponsored by the Small Business Development Center and the North Dakota Council on the Arts. The Woolly Girls have exhibited work in the Pekin Art Show, "A Woman's Perspective: Women's Work" an exhibition by the Northwest Art Center Gallery, and in a traveling exhibit sponsored by the North Dakota Gallery Association. The North Dakota Council on the Arts commissioned the Woolly Girls to create their 7th Annual Christmas ornament.

Janet Jacobson has had an interest in art and sewing from the time she was a very small girl. Her mother was an accomplished seamstress who made almost all of her daughters' clothing, often taking a basic pattern and redesigning it to fit the current style. Janet began creating her own clothing when she was about ten years old. Her mother, taught by her father, a Norwegian immigrant, also taught Janet to spin and knit. Janet's love of art started from an early age of painting and music camp to college photography classes from the University of North Dakota. After obtaining a degree in elementary education, Janet and her husband, Terry, returned to her family's farm where they have farmed and lived since 1974. For the next 25 years, Janet studied floral design and worked as chief designer and assistant manager of a family owned floral shop. The love of the land, the sky which expands above the North Dakota prairie and the animals which share her farm home are evident in the work Janet produces. Colors of vibrant sunsets and subtle shades of prairie grasses are woven through the Woolly Girls' wool creations.

Diane Schill lives with her husband, Dennis, a short mile and a half from Canada. Their farm is the home of the North Dakota Woolly Girls mill facility. Diane was raised in Huron, South Dakota, and was greatly influenced by her grandmother, with whom she spent much of her time and from whom she learned to embroider, knit and sew. Diane's work is a mixture of the eye of a horticulturist—she has degrees in parks and recreation and botany and biology and that of a fiber artist. Often the flowers which brighten her gardens find themselves represented in her embroidery, needle felting and weaving. Diane began felting by recycling wool sweaters from the thrift store where she worked. Using her grandmother's mitten pattern, she made mittens for her boys and friends from the felt made by shrinking the woolen garments in the washing machine. The results were warm, durable and attractive mittens. Diane's wonderfully textured hand spun yarns are frequently used as trim on the Woolly Girls products. Diane is a master feltmaker and an accomplished weaver.
